

Introduction

Candidates may be disappointed at their exam results and want to find out more about the comments made about their performance during the marking process.

For this reason, we need to charge a small administrative fee to provide the personal data since it is operationally excessive and time consuming.

Exempt from the ICO

'The GDPR gives candidates the right to see information held about them. In terms of exams, they can request information about them and their exam performance, including:

*Mark
Comments written by the examiner; and
Minutes of any exam appeals panels.*

But it does not give them the right to copies of their answers to exam questions.'

In summary, the GDPR provisions do not apply to data consisting of information produced by
